1-The Banyoro (Contributed by Ssemakula Victor Powell)

- ❖ The kingdom was formed after the collapse of the Chwezi Empire. Later, new kingdoms arose in the Great Lakes area, such as Ankole, Mpororo, Buganda, Toro, Busoga, Bagisu (in present-day Kenya and Uganda), Rwanda, Burundi and Bunyoro itself. The kingdom rose to power and controlled a number of the holiest shrines in the region, as well as the lucrative Kiboro saltworks of Lake Mwitazinge (Present day Lake Albert). Having the highest quality of metallurgy in the region made it one of the strongest economic and military powers in the Great Lakes Region.
- ❖ The kingship of Bunyoro is the most important institution of the kingdom. The king is patrilineal meaning that is passed down through the male line. The tradition comes from a myth the Nyoro people tell. Once, there were three sons of the Mukama, all having the same name. In order to name them, the Mukama asked the God to help him. The boys must go through a series of tasks before being named. The three of them had to sit all night holding a pot of milk. Milk is a sacred drink used for important events. Whoever had all their milk still in the pot by morning would be king. The youngest son dropped the milk and begged his older brothers to give him some of theirs, they did. When morning came the eldest son dropped some more. When God and the Mukama came to observe the pots, the eldest son was named after the peasants who are not fit for cattle herding since he had no milk left. The middle Son was named after cattle herders and the youngest son was named Oukama and later Mukama or king for having the most milk. This myth shows the ways in which the Nyoro infuses religion and Kingship together.

Decline

- ❖ Bunyoro began to decline in the late eighteenth century due to internal divisions. Buganda seized the Kooki and Buddu regions from Bunyoro at the end of the century. In the beginning of the 1830s, the large province of Toro separated, claiming much of the lucrative salt works. To the south Rwanda and Ankole were both growing rapidly, taking over some of the smaller kingdoms that had been Bunyoro's vassals.
- ❖ Thus by the mid-nineteenth century Bunyoro (also known as UNYORO at that time) was a far smaller state, though it was wealthy due to income generated from controlling the lucrative trade routes over Lake Victoria and linking to the coast of the Indian Ocean. In particular, Bunyoro benefited from the trade in ivory. Due to the volatile nature of the ivory trade, an armed struggle developed between the Baganda and The Banyoro. As a result, the Capital was moved from Masindi to the less vulnerable Mparo. Following the death of Omukama Kyeyambe III, the region experienced a lot of political instability where two kings ruled in a volatile political environment.
- ❖ In July 1890 an agreement was settled whereby the entire region north of Lake Victoria was given to Great Britain. In 1894 Great Britain declared the region its protectorate. In alliance with Buganda, King Omukama Kabalega of Bunyoro resisted the efforts of great Britain, aiming to take control of the Kingdom. However, in 1899 Omukama Kabalega was captured and exiled to the Seychelles, and Bunyoro was subsequently annexed to the British Empire. Because of Bunyoro's resistance to the British, a portion of the Bunyoro kingdom's territory was given to Buganda and Toro.

- ❖ The country was put under the governance of Buganda administrators. The Banyoro revolted/rebelled in 1907; the revolt was put down, and relations improved somewhat. After the region remained loyal to the Britain in World War 1 a new agreement was made in 1933 giving the region more autonomy. Bunyoro remains as one of the five consistent kingdoms of Uganda along with Buganda.

Contemporary society

- ❖ During the first regime of Milton Obote, the Kingdom of Bunyoro initially benefited from regaining the two "lost counties" of Buyaga and Bugagaizi following a 1964 referendum. It was however forcefully disbanded in 1967. The kingdom, together with three others, Busoga, Buganda and Toro remained banned during the regime of dictator Idi Amin (1971-1979) and the second regime of Milton Obote (1980-1985) and remained banned until 1993.
- ❖ In 1993, the kingdom was re-established and in 1995 the new constitution of Uganda was made, allowing and recognizing the kingdoms. The current Kingdom covers the districts of Buliisa, Hoima, Kibaale, Kakumiro, Kagadi, Kiryandongo and Masindi as depicted in the diagram below;

- ❖ According to 1997 projections, the total population of the kingdom is between 800,000 but there may be 1,400,000 (depending on sources) living in 250,000-350,000 households. 96% of the population lives in rural areas, and only 1% of the population uses electricity for lighting and cooking. More than 92% of the population is poor, and earned less than half of the Ugandan National Average, and about 50% of the population is illiterate.

3-The Kikuyu (contributed by Ssemmanda Isaac)

- The Kikuyu belong to the Northeastern Bantu branch. Their language is most closely related to that of the Embu and Mbeere. Geographically, they are concentrated in the vicinity of Mount Kenya.
- The exact place that the Northeast Bantu speakers migrated from after the initial Bantu expansion is uncertain. Some authorities suggest that the Kikuyu arrived in their present Mount Kenya area of habitation from earlier settlements further to the north and east, while others argue that the Kikuyu, along with their closely related Eastern Bantu neighbours the Embu, Meru, Mbeere, and Kamba moved into Kenya from points further north.
- From archaeological evidence, their arrival at the northern side of Mt. Kenya dates to around the 3rd century, as part of the larger group known as Thagicu. By the 6th century, there was a community of Agikuyu newly established at Gatung'ang'a in Nyeri. The Agikuyu established themselves in their current homeland of Mt. Kenya region by the 13th century.

- Before the establishment of East Africa Protectorate in 1895, the Agĩkũyũ preserved geographic and political power from almost all external influence for many generations; they had never been subdued. Before the arrival of the British, Arabs involved in slave trading and their caravans passed at the southern edges of the Agĩkũyũ nation. Slavery as an institution did not exist amongst the Agĩkũyũ, nor did they make raids for the capture of slaves. The Arabs who tried to venture into Agĩkũyũ land met instant death. Relying on a combination of land purchases, blood-brotherhood (partnerships), intermarriage with other people, and their adoption and absorption, the Agĩkũyũ were in a constant state of territorial expansion. Economically, the Agĩkũyũ were great farmers and shrewd businesspeople. Besides farming and business, the Agĩkũyũ were involved in small scale industries with professions such as bridge building, string making, wire drawing, and iron chain making. The Agĩkũyũ had a great sense of justice (kĩhooto).

Social and political life

- The Agĩkũyũ nation was divided into nine clans. Each clan traced its lineage to a single female ancestor and a daughter of Mumbi. The clans were not restricted to any particular geographical area, they lived side by side. Some clans had a recognised leader, others did not. However, in either case, real political power was exercised by the ruling council of elders for each clan. Each clan then forwarded the leader of its council to the apex council of elders for the whole community. The overall council of elders representing all the clans was then led by a headman or the nation's spokesman.
- The clans are;
 - Anjiru: They are the defenders and offer sacrifices for warriors before war
 - Ambui: They are the spies in the land and always seek leadership
 - Agaciku: They are very good brokers and negotiators
 - Aceera: They are good lawyers and have a very sweet tongue. However, they are very mean
 - Arimu kana Agathigia: They are defenders of the land

- Ambura kana Ethaga/Akiuru: They are doctors but are also thought to be witchdoctors
- Angari kana Aithekahuno: They are investigators in the community (CID)
- Angui kana Aithiegeni: They are messengers in the land
- Angeci kana Aithera andu: They are the warriors who protect the land
- Aica Kamuyu: They are witches

Culture

Language

- Gĩkũyũs speak the Gĩkũyũ language as their native tongue, which is a member of the Bantu language family. Additionally, many speak Swahili and English as lingua franca, the two official languages of Kenya.
- The Gĩkũyũ are closely related to some Bantu communities due to intermarriages prior to colonization. These communities are the Embu, Meru, and Akamba people who also live around Mt. Kenya. Members of the Gĩkũyũ family from the greater Kiambu (commonly referred to as the Kabete) and Nyeri districts are closely related to the Maasai people also due to intermarriage prior to colonization.
- The Gĩkũyũ people between Thika and Mbeere are closely related to the Kamba people who speak a language similar to Gĩkũyũ. As a result, the Gĩkũyũ people that retain much of the original Gĩkũyũ heritage reside around Kirinyaga and Murang'a regions of Kenya. The Murang'a district is considered by many to be the cradle of the Gĩkũyũ people and as such, Gĩkũyũ's from the Murang'a area are considered to be of a purer breed.
